Whether you're doing it for TikTok or just putting something together for your group of friends, there are video editor apps available for every person and every situation. Forget about jumping on a computer to do some video editing, especially since you can record and then start working with Adobe Premier Rush. The app had been in development for quite some time before finally seeing its release on the Play Store. Adobe fans can also rejoice as this app joins the ranks of Photoshop and Lightroom as some of the best Android apps today. Kinemaster is another great video editing app that works on your phone, tablet or even Chromebook. Get all the tools you need, at your fingertips, and create something that's never been thought of before. Then, share it with your friends and family, upload it to Instagram, or post it on your YouTube channel. FilmoraGo was a source of frustration with a clumsy interface, but that's no longer the case. Adobe Premiere Rush After making its Android debut in 2019, Premier Rush has become a favorite for those who want to edit videos on the go. This is especially true for those who are already subscribed to Adobe's Creative Cloud, which also opens ports to import files from Lightroom, Photoshop, and other creative apps. Premier Rush is one of those apps that you run on any device you own, which means you can start editing on your phone and then pick things up later on your computer or vice versa. The interface is extremely easy to navigate, and you can even use Premiere Rush to record the video, eliminating the need to import it from the Camera or File app. The biggest hang-up with Premier Rush is that it is not compatible with every phone on the market. We're not exactly sure when the list will continue to grow, but you can expect it to work with Samsung flagships, the latest OnePlus devices, and even Pixel 4 and 4 XL. For now, the owners of those smartphones will enjoy editing their videos with the Adobe app. The best video editor for Android, if it is Adobe Premiere Rush compatible it is a fantastic way to record and edit your videos in one place.
